Meridian Centre Peacehaven

Directors Notes

It is my pleasure to welcome you to Pantoland, where all the pantomime characters go until it's time for panto again. You will recognise so many of the residents.

Alice was always a curious child; a rabbit hole and a mirror led her into her best-known adventures. Today, she'll take the lift to a new magical land. There's a problem that needs solving and it looks like she's just the heroine that's required.

Evil Witch Whey has a plan to remove the fairies from pantos and for the baddies to win every time! She starts by freezing all our usual heroes. So, it's left to Alice, a pantomime horse called Trigger and trainee Fairy Nuff to save the day.

We are pleased once again to be joined by the Bond School of Dance dancers. Where do they find all that energy?

I should like to thank all members of the cast and crew for their tremendous hard work over the last three months. You will see the results.

Special thanks to Georgie Bancroft as Assistant Director, Wendy Clare for costumes and Michelle Roman for some great props, they all worked so hard. Particular thanks to Judith Foot who worked tirelessly to ensure we had lights and sound for this production. She also has a principal role and has been fabulous as Musical Director.

Lastly thanks to you for coming, and don't forget to cheer the goodies, boo the villains and laugh at all the jokes.

Tony Garwood,

Director
